STATEMENT OF UNDETERMINED MATTERS REQUIRING CONSTITUTIONAL CLARIFICATION

1. Transparency and Evidential Repository

To ensure transparency and continuity, I have established a publicly accessible evidential repository containing pleadings, correspondence, criminal referral transmissions, and source materials relating to Oxus and associated matters.

The repository includes documentation already relied upon in court proceedings, together with publicly reported material concerning Oxus, the Duke of York, and Kazakh-linked transactions that have recently re-entered public scrutiny.

Publicly available source material, including material emerging from the recently disclosed Epstein Files, has been identified and preserved within the repository. That material has not yet been the subject of full analytical review due to health constraints.

The repository exists to ensure that the evidential record remains independently accessible and verifiable.

2. Purpose of this Statement

This statement does not invite Parliament to determine facts, reassess judicial reasoning, or intervene in the merits of litigation.

It asks only whether formally raised matters may remain without identifiable judicial determination within the constitutional framework of the United Kingdom.

If a judicial act exists determining these matters, it should be identified by reference to judge, date, order, and reasons.

If no such act exists, the absence requires institutional acknowledgment.

3. The Structural Issue

Across multiple procedural stages, formally filed applications and documented issues were placed before the courts.

Those matters include:

- Participation measures under Part 3A,
- Maintenance Pending Suit (MPS) enforcement,
- Imerman device custody and review,
- The Oxus asset disclosure issue.

Each was formally raised.

Each was documented.

Each entered the judicial system through recognised procedural routes.

The procedural sequence is summarised in Annex 2 (Short Neutral Chronology), which records the absence of any identified judicial act determining participation measures or MPS following repeated formal notifications.

The question is not whether those matters were persuasive.

The question is whether they were determined.

4. Oxus – Absence of Identifiable Determination

Applications and submissions concerning the Oxus asset were formally filed and repeated across procedural stages.

Annex 1 records each procedural event.

No identifiable judicial act determining the Oxus issue by reference to judge, date, order, and reasons has been identified.

If such a determination exists, it should be specified.

If not, the matter remains procedurally unresolved.

5. Maintenance Pending Suit (MPS)

A formal enforcement application (Form D50K) was filed while the order was operative.

Acknowledgment was issued.

Arrears were later remitted in the final order.

Annex 3 records the procedural sequence.

No identifiable judicial act determining the enforcement application prior to remission has been identified.

If such a determination exists, it should be identified.

If not, the enforcement issue was absorbed without adjudication.

6. Imerman Devices – Custody and Review

The Imerman devices were taken into custody and remained subject to correspondence concerning review, disclosure, and evidential relevance.

Requests for clarification and review were formally transmitted.

Annex 4 records the procedural history.

No identifiable judicial act determining custody, review, release, or evidential governance by reference to judge, date, order, and reasons has been identified.

If such a determination exists, it should be identified.

If not, custody and review remain undetermined.

7. The Constitutional Consequence

Where formally filed matters remain without identifiable judicial determination, the system shifts from adjudication to absorption.

This statement does not allege misconduct.

It identifies classification.

Either:

1. A judicial act exists determining each matter; or
2. No such act exists.

There is no third category.

If no determination exists, Parliament is asked to state whether continued absence of judicial determination in these circumstances is constitutionally acceptable.

8. Parliamentary Clarification Requested

Parliament is not asked to decide the merits of any issue.

Parliament is asked to clarify:

1. Whether formally filed applications may remain without identifiable judicial determination.
2. Whether remission of MPS arrears absent enforcement adjudication is constitutionally acceptable.
3. Whether custody and review of evidential material may persist without identifiable judicial act.
4. Whether repeated formal raising of an asset disclosure issue may remain without identifiable determination.
5. Whether such absence, if confirmed, is consistent with the constitutional operation of the justice system.

If determinations exist, they should be identified.

If they do not, Parliament must state whether that position is acceptable.

9. Conclusion

This is not a request for intervention in judicial reasoning.

It is a request for constitutional clarity.

Either identifiable judicial acts exist.

Or they do not.

If they do not, institutional ownership of that position is required.
